This is to inform you that an application has been submitted for a floodplain permit. The City of Glasgow has filed for a floodplain permit. The City of Glasgow has contracted Morrison-Maierle to design the replacement sections of an aging 20-inch raw water transmission main serving the City of Glasgow. This permit will cover pipe replacement within 3 river crossing sections along the Milk River.

The existing 20-inch raw water transmission main, supplied from an intake on the Missouri River, is routed from a nearby pump station and crosses beneath the Milk River south of US Highway 2 and serves raw water to the City of Glasgow. The water main was installed in 1987 and has been experiencing increased leaks and breaking over the last several years. The existing pipe would be replaced with a high-density polyethylene (HDPE) pipe.

If you have any questions please contact Cameron Shipp, Valley County Floodplain Administrator at (406) 228-6264.

There’s supposed to be a road there. It’s underwater, and where I needed to drive to get Dennis so we could pull the Trac out. I drove through the neighbor’s (unseeded) field to the south (right).

ber birds works.

I planted all the gladiolus bulbs alongside the eastern fence, which is chicken wire. I had enough to also plant on both sides of that fence. I finished that row, to the south (but uphill) with two types of carrots. The next row to the East is fairly close, and it’s planted with Swiss chard and beets. Finishing the pea row, I put in 25 hills of white potatoes. At the top of the other fence row, there are 20 hills of red potatoes. Since they’ll take a while to get big, I planted a packet of radishes down the center. It’s too early to plant the scarlet runner beans on the remaining fencing. Besides, I haven’t yet installed the netting that will get attached there to be ready to throw over the top of the peas. I’ll get there.

That Monday morning was spent in the kitchen. I’d agreed to provide desserts for the women’s golf league kick-off on Tuesday. I made a batch of Mock Twix Bars as well as a batch of Breakfast Cookies. Both recipes have appeared in previous columns here. Both desserts are (mostly) compliant with the Whole Life Challenge. The Twix bars have a top layer of melted dark chocolate chips (with coconut oil), so they aren’t quite kosher. But they sure are tasty and worth losing a nutrition point.

There was no gardening done Tuesday, although I did visit a greenhouse. I picked up more work: perennials for shady areas, and a couple new succulents. Those succulents are now planted in a former shallow birdbath, which will move inside next fall for the winter. I’m going to try strawberries yet again, and hope the deer won’t eat them down to nothing. I bought everbearing bare roots as well as some ornamental strawberry plants: they have reddish-pink flowers.

Wednesday afternoon saw me get the first mowing of the year completed. There was a hiccup to that as Dennis managed to get the Trac stuck as he started seeding the wheat crop. I’d helped him fill the air seeder, then waited for the signal that all was working as it should before I headed home. When I stopped to empty the grass catcher bags (they filled fast as there were still lots of leaves being sucked up), he phoned to say he was stuck. He hadn’t even completed an hour of seeding! And his timing was impeccable: if I hadn’t stopped the mower I never would have heard the cell phone ring. We did get the Trac towed out of the wash sand (Big Bud to the rescue again) with enough time to finish the mowing. That worked well since it started raining that night.

I’ve enjoyed my first cutting of asparagus. I zapped all the smaller stalks (saved the larger ones to give to our daughter) with a drizzle of olive oil, chopped garlic scapes (they’re coming up gangbusters), some fresh tarragon leaves, and a squeeze of fresh lemon. Delicious!

Update: while I haven’t yet used any of the rhubarb, it’s growing like weeds. The section under the upended flowerpot is obviously not hindered by the lack of sunlight. That pot is now showing a good 4-5” gap between the lower edge and the ground! As soon as it dries up enough that I won’t get my shoes muddy, I’m going to go pull some stalks and make a batch of Polish Rhubarb drink. That will definitely be compliant as it uses honey instead of refined sugar.

MARY HONRUD / FOR THE COURIER

French tarragon thriving despite me not removing last year’s stalks yet.
